Early Life and Education

Smoke Mercy Tullis Bukhari was born in 1948 in Chicago, Illinois. Her parents were both educators, and she grew up in a home where intellectual curiosity was encouraged. Bukhari attended the University of Chicago, where she earned her bachelor's degree in sociology in 1970. She then went on to earn her master's degree and PhD in sociology from the University of California, Berkeley in 1975 and 1980, respectively.

Career

After completing her PhD, Bukhari joined the faculty of the University of Michigan, where she taught for 25 years. In 2005, she moved to the University of California, Los Angeles, where she is currently a distinguished professor of sociology.

Bukhari's research has focused on three main areas: race, gender, and inequality. Her work on race has explored the ways in which race shapes social and economic outcomes in the United States. She has also written extensively about the intersection of race and gender, and the ways in which both race and gender contribute to social inequality.

Bukhari's work on inequality has focused on the ways in which economic inequality shapes social and political life. She has argued that economic inequality is a major cause of social unrest and political instability. She has also written about the ways in which inequality can be reduced through public policy.

Contributions to Sociology

Bukhari's work has made a significant contribution to the field of sociology. Her research on race, gender, and inequality has helped to shape our understanding of these critical social issues. She has also been a vocal advocate for social justice, and her work has helped to inspire a new generation of sociologists to pursue research that can make a difference in the world.

Awards and Honors

Bukhari has received numerous awards and honors for her work. In 2005, she was elected to the National Academy of Sciences. She has also received the American Sociological Association's Distinguished Career Award, the American Studies Association's Lifetime Achievement Award, and the University of California, Los Angeles's Faculty Research Lecturer Award.
